After you have printed your report or folder, or designed your new menu you might be thinking that the hard work is finished. Often, however, some additional steps are needed to actually place your idea in the hands of users. This may sound simplistic, but presentation is everything. Your message gets lost in a stack of copies, unless organized into a tangible product with a cover and organization, that can be passed around for review. The finish you choose depends on the product but here are a few things we can do for your next report.

Spiral bind. You remember this from school, the plastic backed book, with the rectangular holes punched in the spine. We can do this very inexpensively, typically a dollar per item. Up to an 1/8th of an inch; slightly more for thicker books. We include a clear cover and spine at this price.

Need more style, thermal binding, while more costly, gives your reports a professional look, and discourages copying. These binders start at 2.00 per item for the thinnest binder, and are progressively more expensive as they get larger.

Folding, when needed, is accomplished in volume with a mechanized folder. This makes for nice brochures and handouts. We can fold for pennies per page.

Tired of 8.5 x 11? For smaller handouts or irregular shapes, you have to cut some paper. If your hand paper shear is not getting it, let us do it right. Our guillotine cutter is over a hundred years old, but still working. (Just like our employees under the new social security rules) and we can cut anything down to anything, straight and true. With proper layout, this can save a bundle on paper costs, and perhaps a tree!

If you want booklets bound with staples, sort of like magazines, we have the stapler for the job.

Finally, for the perfect cover, we can laminate the top page of your project. When spiral bound, or spine stapled, this can produce a moisture-resistant cover, much more durable than paper. I should also mention menus, product list, operating instructions, or anything that requires durability and protection from the elements. In our shop, we have operating guides for the copiers, price lists for cardboard boxes, and smaller signs for everything from mailboxes to check cashing to parking. What can we do for you?
